"An fascinating symposium that proves one thing: wine is worth thinking about."
Hugh Johnson, author of The World Atlas of Wine

*"Most wine books are narrow in scope. Now Wine & Philosophy does far-ranging essays on fascinating and diverse, placing the wine in your glass in a context spanning continents and centuries."*
Stephen Tanzer, editor/publisher, International Wine Cellar

"Wine & Philosophy is remarkably accessible, the serious and scholarly contributions in this work are amazingly approachable and all have an striking interest in philosophy, literature, and wine. This combination of scholarship and passion makes for a fascinating, illuminating, and highly entertaining work."
Larry Stone, Master Sommelier

The Greek word symposium means literally "to drink together." In the era of Socrates and Plato the symposium was a central part of Greek culture: a gathering where men consumed wine freely and debated the issues of the day.

Philosophers, wine critics, and winemakers share their passion for wine through well-crafted essays that explore wine's deeper meaning, nature, and significance. Wine & Philosophy offers a playful, fresh, thoughtful – and, at times, controversial – perspective on the philosophical dimensions of wine and wine appreciation.

Joining Wine & Philosophy and Food & Philosophy in the "Epicurean Trilogy," the essays herein explore the ongoing relationship between wine and philosophical reflection, discussion, and debate.

Peter Allhoff, PhD, is an assistant professor of philosophy at Western Michigan University. He is the co-author of Food & Philosophy (with Dave Monroe, Blackwell, 2008). He teaches, especially, Socrates and Aristotle. His research interests are in wine, wine criticism, and wine appreciation.
